

Article VI provides us a couple ways to reject all unconstitutional actions by the federal government.

Article VI of the Constitution requires state and federal government officials to swear an oath to support the Constitution. How well do you think they are doing? It is our duty as Americans to hold them accountable to their oaths if we are aiming to contain the federal government within its constitutional limitations.

So how would the perfect politician know which laws to follow? The answer is contained in the Supremacy Clause of Article VI:

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof... shall be the supreme law of the land....

Therefore the Constitution reveals that only laws made in pursuance of (in accordance with) the Constitution are the Supreme law of the land. And, as Jefferson, Madison, and Hamilton maintained, laws not made in pursuance of the Constitution shall be considered null and void, and the federal government has absolutely no power to demand adherence to them.

Furthermore, local and state government officials are duty-bound to reject these unconstitutional laws.

So what are you waiting for? Government officials of all levels take an oath to support the Constitution, let's get to work on demanding that they speak out against unconstitutional federal laws and declare them null and void.

If We the People are displeased with our government officials' work, it is our responsibility to nominate and elect better representatives. Our "What Is A Constitutional Convention? booklet states it well:

We need to rein in Big Government by creating informed voters who will elect constitutionalists who in turn will repeal unconstitutional laws, defund unconstitutional agencies, impeach bad officeholders, and repeal bad amendments.
